

I strongly object to Sinclair Broadcasting's management decision to air a highly partisan attack on Sen. John Kerry in the middle of a presidential election campaign. This is especially unsettling, because the attack is foisted off on an unsuspecting public as "news" rather than editorial opinion.

Those who use the public airwaves should serve the community in which they broadcast. The objectionable material which Sinclair is directing its local stations to broadcast offends this community's standards for decency. Sinclair's offensive behavior should be weighed carefully by the Commission when considering Sinclair's application for license renewal.
